

My Birthday Book

Teachers' Notes:

This is a great interactive activity. Your student should make a small book from paper. I usually have them fold and cut their paper into 8 different pages. Then, I go through each page and have them write their book in accordance with the powerpoint presentation. With each page the student should draw a small picture that represents what they are writing. For example, if they write "Today I will eat pizza." they should draw a pizza. This allows students to celebrate their birthday and to practice the future tense at the same time. Ask follow up questions to allow them to expand on their answers.

Parents' Notes:

This is a great interactive activity. Your child should make a small book from paper. I usually have them fold and cut their paper into 8 different pages. Then, I go through each page and have them write their book in accordance with the powerpoint presentation. With each page your child should draw a small picture that represents what they are writing. For example, if they write "Today I will eat pizza." they should draw a pizza. This allows children to celebrate their birthday and to practice the future tense at the same time. Ask follow up questions to allow them to expand on their answers.

Mona's English Class

Today I am _____ years old.

Today I will eat

_____.

Moss's English Class

Today I will play

_____.

Moss's English Class

Today I will sing

_____.

Today I will spend time with

_____.

Today I will wish for

_____.

Mom's English Class

Today is
_____.